

Those who know me (now the rest of you will know) understand that I am not very proficient with a computer. I am able to do small tasks but when it comes to the detailed things I call in re-enforcements. I do know enough to realize that there is a world of information available at one's fingertips (provided he/she knows how to get to it). In my own defense, due to my age I did not grow up with computers and all the other gadgets that are available. Let me tell you that the best it got when I was growing up was a slide rule (which I never conquered) and a typewriter. Although the endless search for knowledge seems to intensify I am thankful that God has provided all the information we need for eternal life through His word to mankind. Although to some it might be outdated the Bible is still God's answer to man's greatest questions. Computers can only provide the information that has been fed to it by humans. The Bible is not a product of man but rather of the Holy Spirit guiding men to deliver the message of God to his creation (2 Peter 1:21; 2 Timothy 3:16). The only true source of God's will for man is the Bible. Far too many people rely on what others tell them about God rather than studying for themselves. The reason people are so capable in the use of modern technology is that they use it regularly so it must be with God's word. Paul commands us to study (2 Timothy 2:15). Every person should be able to give a reason for their hope (1 Peter 3:15). If your hope is not based on truth then you have a false sense of security. "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me" (John 5:39).
